PREFACE.

The Massachusetts State Library was established by an Act of the Legislature, approved March 3, 1826, which provided that the books and maps in the several apartments of the State House should be collected and arranged in the Land Office, and placed under the care of the Land Agent. The action to which the origin of the Library may be traced was taken fifteen years earlier, when provision was made for the inauguration of the system of annual interchange of statutes between the several States, — a step which led to the formation of legislative libraries as a part of the State system throughout the Union. The Act establishing the State Library placed it under the superintendence of an annually appointed legislative committee, and provided for an annual appropriation of "three hundred dollars for ten years," to procure "such books, maps and charts, works of science and the arts, as may tend to illustrate the resources and means of internal improvement of the Commonwealth or of the United States." This appropriation was subsequently made annual, without limit of time. Three months after the passage of this Act, the committee reported to the Legislature that the entire expense of collecting the books, and providing for their safe keeping, was $191.76, and that the Library was ready for the use of the General Court. The Library remained in the care of the Land Agent for twenty-three years, or until April 28, 1849, when 7,346 volumes had accumulated; and the relation of the Library to the educational interests of the State was recognized by its transfer to the care of the Secretary of the State Board of Education. In order to secure a settled policy in the administration of its affairs, the supervision, which had been previously exercised by a legislative committee, was vested in a Board of three Trustees, appointed by the Governor and Council for three years' service. The care and direction of the Library has been maintained upon this system, with harmony and efficiency, from 1850 to the present time, — a period of thirty years. In 1856 the Library was removed from the basement of the State House to the hall it now occupies, and in the succeeding year the annual appropriation, which had remained at the fixed sum of three hundred dollars for thirty years, was increased to twenty-three hundred dollars, — the amount of the present appropriation.

The special object of the Library has been to provide such works of reference, and other publications, as would aid the members of the Legislature and other officers of the State Government in the intelligent performance of their duties. Its Catalogue, therefore, comprises the statutes and judicial decisions of the several States, of the General Government of Great Britain and its dependencies, and of other countries, the publications of a general and local nature designed to illustrate the history of the State and Nation, the standard works of general history and the history of other States and Countries, a selection of the biographical, political, statistical, financial, economic, and scientific writings of the best authorities, and such works of a general character as seem to have a special adaptation for the use of those chosen to perfect the legislation of the State, or to interpret and administer its laws.

The first Catalogue of the Library bears the imprint "1831," and contains 2,102 titles, filling a pamphlet of forty-three pages. The second Catalogue, printed in 1846, contains 141 pages, and shows that the Library at that date numbered 5,764 volumes. The third Catalogue, published in 1858, and which has been in use for over twenty years, formed a volume of 338 pages, and contains about twelve thousand titles.

This volume contains the fourth Catalogue of the Library. It was commenced by authority of the Legislature of 1874, during the administration of the late Samuel C. Jackson, D.D., as acting librarian, contains the titles of about forty-two thousand volumes, and represents the condition of the Library Oct. 1, 1879. The subsequent annual reports of the librarian will be arranged in the form of Supplements to this Catalogue, containing the additions for each year, in order that a complete list of the books in the Library may be at all times accessible in print.

The present Catalogue has been compiled upon the plan which appears to afford the readiest facilities for reference, the details of which are explained in a subsequent note. Its preparation and progress through the press have been under the direction of Miss Ellen M. Sawyer, with the aid of Miss Augusta I. Appleton. All who consult its pages will appreciate the skill and accuracy with which the work has been performed.

Boston, Jan. 1, 1880.

EXPLANATIONS.

The following Catalogue has been compiled according to the plan known as the Dictionary system, the distinguishing feature in which is the arrangement of headings (author, subject, title, and form) in one alphabetical series.

Each work is entered under the name of the author and under the subject, with references from the title whenever the subject is not distinctly mentioned.

Anonymous works (except those relating to a person, city, or other clearly defined subject) are entered under the first word of the title not an article or a preposition. But, if the initials or any part of the author's name appear, the entry is made under these, and a pseudonymous work is entered under the pseudonym, if the author's real name is not known.

Local benevolent, and moral societies, ecclesiastical organizations, &c., (English and American), will be found under the name of the place in which they have their headquarters; literary societies (except those of strictly local importance), under the name of the society; foreign societies, under the name of the place.

In headings, names usually omitted by the author are enclosed in parentheses, as, Dickens, Charles (John Huffam); Hunt, (James Henry) Leigh.

Compound names (English and foreign) are entered under the first part of the name; as, Baron-Wilson, Jex-Blake, Stael-Holstein.

French surnames beginning with Le, La, or L', are entered under L; with Du or Des, under D; with de or d', under the name following the prefix. In English names the prefix is accounted a part of the name.

In German names used as headings, the diphthongs ä, ö, ü, are written ae, oe, ue, and are arranged accordingly.

Of two synonymous headings, the popular has generally been preferred to the scientific; as, Birds to Ornithology, Insects to Entomology.

The law reports of the different states and countries are arranged chronologically under the names of states and countries.

The number of pages of single volumes is specified when over six hundred or under one hundred pages.

Lists of contents have been given to books containing the works of several authors, — to the collected works of a single author when filling two or more volumes, — and to works on several distinct subjects; works of this class have also been fully analyzed.

Words added to the title are enclosed in brackets.

Heavy type is used in headings for the initial words under which the entries are made; — in references, for the word referred to; — and for the names of authors in lists of contents.

SMALL CAPITALS are used for the alphabet of authors under a subject or class.

Small type is used for notes, lists of contents, and references.

The following abbreviations have been used: n.t.p., no titlepage; n.p., no place; n.d., no date; t.p.w., titlepage wanting; ed., edition, edited; tr., translated; v., volume; l., sm., sq., obl. (prefixed to the form), large, small, square, oblong; anon., anonymous; pseud., pseudonym.
